

- We would need to severely limit the size of classes
- Students would need to bring their own props. Hence such props as chairs would be problematic
- It would be wise for everyone to wear masks which would also be problematic, especially for the teacher
- The teacher would need to stay on the platform which 'guts' the reason to meet in person
- The use of public bathrooms remains an issue

So for now it makes more sense to continue with virtual classes on Zoom.

My friend Jarvis Chen has an interesting fuller explanation of the issues involved in in-person yoga classes in this article if you are interested in his articulate exploration.
